A Little Afternoon Tea History. The tradition of Afternoon Tea is traditionally credited to Anna Maria Russell, the Seventh Duchess of Bedford, around 1840. With dinner often served as late as 8 or 9 p.m., the Duchess experienced what she described as a "sinking feeling" in the late afternoon. She requested a tray of tea, bread and butter, and cake to be brought to her room. What began as a personal afternoon ritual soon became a social occasion when she began inviting friends to join her. The fashionable custom of Afternoon Tea was born.
